Hit or Miss (Zombie Edition)

How to play:
- Print and laminate one or all of these nasty zombies.
- Post one to your wall or whiteboard.
- Students throw a suction cup ball at the zombie or shoot it with a nerf time suction cup gun.
- If it hits the zombie, they are safe.
  If they miss, they have to answer a question.

Who is this sheet for?
Any group of kids that might enjoy having a bit of fun like this to spice up an otherwise straightforward drill. It's great around Halloween and can be a lot of fun.

Variations
I actually like to just draw the face on the board with a marker and each time they hit the zombie, I take a piece away. You can do the same thing with the laminated images if you cut them up but then they take too much time and preparation to hang up. Erasing part of the zombie makes it possible to make the target smaller and smaller each time they score a hit making it harder and harder to hit and thus increasing the chances they have to answer whatever question you have set or perform whatever task you've chosen.

Note: This is really a variation of a very common game. You could run this just as easily with a small basketball net, by sliding a bead or smooth playing piece down a table, flipping a coin or rolling a dice.

Credit
All images created by hand, by Mike Kloran. Check out more of my illustration and educational design at:

www.myenglishimages.com

and my portfolio at: www.kloran.com