

People

About the images

I sat down to make a simple group of images with a country name and a city name to show that the person was from one place but lived in another. He's from India. He lives in New York or something like that. Then I thought that I might want to use these images again with a different level and more information. So, here it is in this form, with no information at all except some spaces for us to write our own ideas in. You could use this a lot of different ways like a whodunnit, a role play, a or whatever you like really. It's actually not that different from the regular images on the site except that it has these lines which are super convenient for writing on. (I'm rambling aren't I?)

Using the worksheet

There are countless ways to use cards in classes. Games of memory, matching games, and games where kids run to the card or throw the card into a hat for a point. As long as you are active and fun and the kids are enjoying themselves you're going to have a great time and they are too. Make sure you and your students say the words again and again and speak, make sentences so everyone can hear and say the sentences in context.

Note: Kids have a way of destroying cards they get hold of, so after printing the cards you might want to laminate them and remember to round off the edges so no one gets a sharp card in the eye. If you do it well enough this opens up the usage of the cards for a few good games where you can flick or flip the cards to be more active.

Credit

All images created by hand, by Mike Kloran. Check out more of my illustration and educational design at:

www.myenglishimages.com

and my portfolio at: www.kloran.com

Blank writing area with horizontal lines.

Blank writing area with horizontal lines.

Blank writing area with horizontal lines.

Blank writing area with horizontal lines.

