A: Hi guys. My name is Linda. I'll be your server.

Can I start you with some drinks?

B: Hi. Yeah, I'll have a cafe mocha.

A: Ok, do you want that iced or hot?

B: Hot please.

A: Great. Take a look at the menu and I'll be right back with your drink.

B: Thank you.

A: Ok, Here's your coffee.

B: Thank you so much.

A: Are you ready to order?

B: Yeah. I think so.

A: Ok, what can I get for you?

B: Can I have the steak please?

A: Ok. That comes with a choice of salad or potato.

B: Salad please.

A: And what kind of dressing would you like?

B: Do you have Italian?

A: We sure do. Anything else?

B: No, I think that's it.

A: Alright. Enjoy your drink and I'll be back soon with your food.

A: How was everything?

B: That was great thank you.

A: Can I bring you another coffee or desert? We have a great pancake and fruit dish.

B: That sounds great but I'm ok. Can I have the check please?

A: Here you go. Do you want to use cash or credit?

B: Cash. Here you go.

A: Thank you. I'll be back in a second with your change.

B: That's ok. Keep the change.

A: Thank you. Have a great day!

B: You too. Thanks.

Abut this worksheet

There's a LOT of language being used here. The whole conversation is so long that I decided to break it down into individual, practicable pieces on the second page.

How you use the worksheet or teach this in class is of course up to you. I've found it helpful to simply role play it with my students as the customers and me as the server modeling the language.

Then, depending on the time and the size of the class, we redo the conversation with the students as servers and customers. We do the conversation several times to repeat the drill and we sometimes even make it a competitions to see who's gong to get the biggest tip by doing the best job with the most accurate English performance.
