This worksheet, these worksheets rather, are for intermediate students who have a grasp of the language but need to brush up their accuracy when using certain verbs. I've used these with success in small groups of students where there was a lot of teacher student interaction.

How to use the worksheet.

1. Drill the patterns of a few words in full sentences.

I'm going to go to the beach tomorrow.

I went to the beach last weekend.

I have gone to the beach twice.

I haven't gone for a long time.

- 2. Students fill in the first page of examples on their own. You can choose to drill these answers with them before they fill in the story but you should definitely drill them after.
- 3. Using the verbs they've just conjugated and drilled, students fill in the story.
- 4. Give students the topic of vacations and let them go to it. Make sure to monitor and offer correction where needed.

Using the rest of the sheets is a bit trickier. Here's what I did.

- 1. Use one page each week. Those are the words you are going to focus on that week. A few of them might be new or used less frequently but it gives you a nice goal to work around.
- 2. Drill the terms with the students. Make it fun, use full sentences, lots of energy and a big smile.
- 3. Have the students use the terms in their writing, in stories or in reading passages. If you can find a story, a blog post, or news article that uses some of the words, have the students read it and find the terms in the story. Along the way there is a lot more they can pick up too!

Note:

This is actually the sort of worksheet that I DON'T usually like. It's just a lot of lists of words. This is a case where making it work, making it effective is really up to the teacher. Time to roll up those sleeves and get to work on this one!

Why don't I usually like these kinds of sheets? Because giving students a list of verbs to conjugate takes the words totally out of context and makes it harder, not easier, to remember. The burden is on the teacher to guide students towards effective use of the terms by creating context.
